The varient of the Coroner's Jury coptains the substance of all that has been said upon the substance of all that has been easily upon the substance of all that has been easily upon the substance of all that has been easily provided from the testimony before us, that if was needlestal, so far as design for the suppler of the child—but that some wicked boys, unknown, are necessary to his death, through thoughdless improduces, and whose names are not before this jury.

Daniel Ristops, Eq., one of our aldest and most temperable officers, was Foreman of that Jury, and was hinself engineer of all the facts, and contributed liberally to the monument. Surely, the character is a customate that there is no "prime fraud" or "humbur," in the matter, with all who know him. The Jury was composed of the less reliable because some of them were some the less reliable because some of them were with life forces.
